Several districts in Gettysburg have not yet reported while New Oxford, Bendersville, Littlestown and Gardners will now make their drive for funds until February. The solicitors feel encouraged with the reception they received last week as most donors have duplicated or increased their last year's gift and confidence in the work of the association has been expressed in all communities.

SCORES BACK SEAT DRIVING AS DANGEROUS

Motor Federation President Declares Driver Able To Handle Car Best.

The back seat "driver" comes in for a jolt in a statement issued today from the headquarters of the Pennsylvania Motor Federation.

"A time-worn proverb has it that two heads are better than one, but that was spoken before the dawn of the motor car age," the statement quotes S. Edward Gable, president of the federation, as saying. "One clear head behind the wheel is far, far better than two, three or more trying to control the car from points of disadvantage in the rear or other seats."

Gable's statement continues: "It takes a clear head and strict attention to the road to operate a car in a safe and sane way in these days of fast-moving motors and heavy traffic." In this connection the so-called rear seat "driver" comes in for censure and a word of admonition. All too frequently do passengers in the rear seat, or the one sitting aside of the driver, try to tell him or her what he or she should or should not do. Such action, which naturally restrains the operator's mind and distracts his attention, is to be severely condemned.

"Every driver should be ready at all times to meet an emergency. He must be quick-thinking and on the alert every second, with nothing other than the task at hand to occupy his attention. This the law requires and common sense dictates and if a man or woman is not capable of operating a car without instructions and suggestions from the rear seat, then he or she has no business at the wheel. Furthermore, if passengers do not feel at ease riding in a car without giving instructions and making suggestions regarding its operation they should stay at home or use some other means of conveyance in which their suggestions and instructions, if uttered at all, can do no harm.

Serious Menace
"Much has been said and written in a jocular vein about the back seat 'driver,' but when all is said and done this type is a serious menace in any motor car. And the difficulty is that neither the law-makers, nor the drivers who so often are subject to this annoyance, can get at the root of the evil. Correction of this condition must come through the so-called rear seat 'drivers' themselves. If they can be made to realize that instructions and suggestions from passengers to the driver hinder rather than help in the careful operation of the car and are the cause of many accidents they perhaps will be more guarded in their utterances.

"If every driver in every car gives undivided attention to the task at hand, unmolested by comment from passengers, there will be far fewer accidents and near accidents on our streets and highways."

Mother of Hero of Sea Rescue Hopes Boy Will Stay Home

The world's hero today, Chief Officer Harry Manning of the rescue ship America, and his mother, Mrs. W. E. Manning, inset, of New York.

New York, Jan. 26 (AP).—Capt. George Fried brought the rescue ship America to the New York quarantine station at 11:47 this morning.

By Helen Mogge

New York, Jan. 26.—In sharp contrast to the sad tale of the sinking of the liner Vestris only a few weeks ago, the world now happily applauds leaders of the successful rescue of the crew of the Italian freighter Florida—Captain George Fried of the U. S. liner America, and his chief officer, Harry Manning.

In a pleasant little apartment on Riverside drive, Mrs. W. E. Manning, mother of Chief Officer Harry Manning, joyously reads the papers. She is happy, for has not her son participated in the rescue of 32 men from almost certain death on a foundering ship? Has he not captained a lifeboat through seas mountain high?

And she is tired, tired because friends and neighbors come and call constantly at her apartment to talk about Harry. Newspaper reporters and photographers are waiting around—all desiring to hear something about the new hero. What should she tell these people? What is there to tell? Neither she nor Harry likes publicity.

His Beginning

"Of course, I'd rather not have this," she says, nodding toward newspaper photographers pointing their little black boxes at her from almost every corner of the room.

ROPER, YOUNG LAUD BREAM

Two famous veteran coaches paid glowing tributes to a youngster in their profession when the Philadelphia alumni association of Gettysburg college convened for its annual banquet in the Benjamin Franklin hotel, Philadelphia, Friday night.

Those two veterans were Bill Roper, of Princeton, and Lou Young, of Pennsylvania, and the youngster was "Hen" Bream, of Gettysburg.

The two famous mentors lauded the achievements of Coach Bream, especially for the remarkable showing the Orange and Blue made this year by defeating, Lehigh, Bucknell, Dickinson, Muhlenberg and Franklin and Marshall to win the conference title for two consecutive years.

Captain John Miller attended the banquet with Coach Bream. Dr. Henry W. A. Hanson was unable to attend because of pressing business engagements.

Prominent speakers at the banquet included Ex-Judge Dimmer Beber, Henry Bickle, son of Dean Bickle, of the college, and now general counsel for the Pennsylvania railroad; Mickey Cochrane, Dr. Walter Cariss, baseball coach at Penn; C. William Duncan and others. More than 100 attended the affair.

"but the people who read the papers like to know all about it."

"I remember how eagerly I read everything I could about the Vestris disaster. And now that Harry seems to be front page news, well—" she smiles, "I mustn't be fussy about it."

Then she ventures: "Harry decided to go into the navy early in life. He is my only boy and I objected. But Harry insisted and both my husband and I consented to let him follow his own inclination. He entered the nautical school at Newport in 1914."

"Then, when six years ago my husband died, I again regretted Harry's love for the sea. What if... if... there's another Vestris disaster?... oh, it seems terrible... and I alone. No one must not think about such things. I don't let myself."

"Here in this apartment I keep a room for Harry," she continues. "Whenever he is in town he always stays with me. Just come and let me show it to you," and she leads the way to the room. Her step is quick now—almost youthful in her eagerness.

In scanning Harry's room one notices a conspicuous number of pictures of Amelia Earhart, the only woman who has flown across the Atlantic.

She's a Friend

"Oh, you see," Mrs. Manning hastens to explain, "Miss Earhart is a friend of Harry's. They have been friends ever since they met on the steamship Roosevelt, which brought Miss Earhart back after the flight. Harry served as master of the Roosevelt at that time." And after a little pause she adds, "I know she will be awfully glad to hear about Harry."

Mrs. Manning's trim little figure is now easily seated in one of Harry's chairs. She seems to rest a bit, and with a faraway look continues:

"I often wonder why Harry took to the sea. There is none in our family who ever served in the navy. But who can explain such mysteries? I try not to think about it any more. But I often think of the happy mothers who have their boys with them."

The telephone rings. With a jerk Mrs. Manning starts up: "It must be about Harry. Maybe it's from Harry. I wonder... Harry..."

It is clear. To the world today Harry Manning, chief officer of the United States liner America, is a hero. But to this frail little woman whose face so clearly bespeaks the anxious hours spent while her son is at sea, the hero is only Harry, her boy.

PATROLMAN IS HURT IN MISHAP

Two Men Are Held Following Collision; Local Officer Experiences Third Crash.

Patrolman Harry W. Wolfe, of the local highway motor patrol sub-station, was off duty today as a result of an accident, near Hummelstown, Thursday afternoon, in which he suffered bruises and lacerations and his motorcycle was wrecked.

As a result of the accident, two men were arrested, Irvin Strohn, Lebanon, charged with improper passing, and Lloyd Horst, Schaeferstown, charged with improper passing, assault and battery by automobile and reckless driving.

Patrolman Wolfe was making a special investigation, and was on his way to Ephrata. As he approached a team, cars driven by Strohn and Horst came toward him. Strohn, according to the officer, endeavored to pass the team before Patrolman Wolfe, and in doing so forced the local officer off the highway.

Knocked 20 Feet

Horst, who was following Strohn, applied the brakes to his machine in an effort to stop as he came abreast of the team. Horst's car skidded and hit Patrolman Wolfe. The officer was thrown against the windshield, and knocked about twenty feet away.

Patrolman Wolfe took the two motorists to Harrisburg, where he charges were sworn out against them. Horst had figured in an accident in Harrisburg earlier the same day, according to the officer, wrecking his father's machine.

This was Patrolman Wolfe's third accident since he was assigned to the local sub-station. He was in an accident at Fairfield recently, and about a week before that was in an accident at Dillsburg.

Susanna Lenglen To Wed Baldwin If He Is Divorced

New York, Jan. 26 (AP).—After a disturbance at the pier, Susanna Lenglen, French tennis star, her mother and Baldwin M. Baldwin, wealthy Californian, left for France today on the steamship Paris.

Also aboard was Dudley Field Malone, New York and Paris lawyer, who said he would try to obtain a divorce for Baldwin, and that then Susanne and Baldwin would be married. Baldwin had several tussles with photographers while the tennis star loudly demanded that they be arrested. In his state-room when he had regained his poise, Baldwin parried questions. Asked whether he planned a divorce and marriage to Susanne, he replied: "Answer that yourself."

"I often wonder why Harry took to the sea. There is none in our family who ever served in the navy. But who can explain such mysteries? I try not to think about it any more. But I often think of the happy mothers who have their boys with them."

FRUIT GROWERS MEET JAN. 30

Prominent Speakers Will Address Meeting In Arendtsville Vocational School.

Adams county orchardists interested in growing cleaner and better apples will meet at Arendtsville, at 7:30 o'clock next Wednesday evening. The meeting will be held in the Vocational high school building.

Speakers will be H. E. Hodgkiss, extension entomologist, and R. S. Kirby, extension plant disease specialist of State college. Kirby will talk on scab control and will show slides illustrating the stages in apple scab spore development. Hodgkiss will discuss the important insect enemies of apples, emphasizing particularly codling moth. Both speakers will explain how the spray service supplied by the agricultural extension service works in the control of fruit diseases and insects.

This year fruit growers lost heavily because of poor control of scab and insect pests. It is the purpose of the extension association to sign up all interested fruit growers in the spray service for the coming year. No information will be given out on the spray service except the party who is interested and will follow the spray recommendation. Those who attend the meeting at Arendtsville will be given cards to sign agreeing to co-operate with the extension service in this vital service to the grower. Those who cannot attend will have an opportunity to obtain the service by signing the card at the county agents office or by writing for same.

No Meeting; No Bond; No Business

Delays continue to beset Samuel G. Spangler, Gettysburg, in his effort to re-open the office of county treasurer, closed since December 26, to which he was appointed recently. The latest delay occurred today when plans for the presentation of the new treasurer's county bond to the commissioners and the court went awry.

Attorney J. L. Williams, solicitor to the county commissioners, refused to agree that the board members be called together today solely for the purpose of passing upon the bond, saying he could see no reason for a special meeting. "There is expense and trouble in connection with calling the commissioners together," he said, "and a delay of a day or two won't make much difference."

Bond Is Ready
Mr. Spangler's county bond of $30,000 was ready for presentation to the commissioners had they been summoned to the court house today. The commissioners, it is said, must first pass on the bond before it can be presented to Judge D. P. McPherson for his approval.

The commissioners' regular meeting day is Tuesday, and consequently, they will not pass upon the treasurer's county bond until then. The regular January term of court is in session next week so that the bond may then be offered to Judge McPherson. Mr. Spangler had hoped to take up the duties of his office today so as to be ready for the added burden of work in connection with a court term.

SLUSHY GOING FOR PEDESTRIANS

A warm sun today continued the melting process.

Coch Eugene Martin's Maroon and White passers bowed to the undefeated Reading high team Friday night 51-45 at Reading, after one of the hardest games the league leaders have faced. It was the tenth consecutive win for the undefeated Red and Black five.

A record crowd witnessed the tilt. Reading was forced to the limit. The Maroons set the pace during the first half and led 23-21 at the end of that period.

Fighting desperately, the Maroons fought the Pretzel Weavers on every term during the next period. The brilliant work of the Martinmen gave them a 33-23 tie at the end of the third period. In the last session Captain Wickel and Yoder, forwards of the league-leaders, got going and their shooting gave Reading a victory. During this final round, the locals were greatly handicapped due to the loss of Captain Sadler who was ejected because of personal fouls.

The battlefield boys put up a great game. Reading is practically unbeatable on their home floor this year and their score last night was their first of the season. The Martinmen collected the same number of field goals as did the victors, but Reading accounted for 11 points from the foul line while the locals scored but five.

Captain Sadler and Warren featured for the Maroons, although every other player gave a fine exhibition. Yoder and Captain Wickel led the onslaught for Reading.

Tonight the Maroons will strive to end their three-game losing streak with a victory over Lebanon. Lebanon is also a tough foe on its home floor but the Martinmen are expecting to come through with a win.

N. Y. Disports Amid Old French Setting At Beaux Arts Ball

New York, Jan. 26 (AP).—Social New York turned its back on America Friday night to live for ten hours amid the scenes of ceremony and grandeur that marked eighteenth-century France, when Napoleon ruled.

Queens and court ladies, soldiers and peasants, reminiscent of those days, moved through the Hotel Astor at the Beaux Arts Ball, the high light of a season's gaiety.

Three Thousand Attend For months New York had been preparing costumes for the affair, giving annually for the Society of Beaux Arts Architects and depicting a phase of French history. Three thousand attended and from the outside Broadway viewed the elegantly costumed ladies and court dignitaries as they arrived.

Three ballrooms were decorated to represent the architecture of the Napoleonic period. The largest, the "Salle d'Honneur," was arranged in a manner befitting the coronation of an emperor. Blue satin draped the ceiling while the walls were hung with silver brocade, drawn apart over each box by large golden cords. The throne and the canopy above it, with the draperies of the grand staircase were green and gold, and this motif was carried out in the medallions hung above each box.

A fanfare of trumpets announced the opening of the pageant, in which 500 took part. An orchestra struck up the overture, the guests who had been dancing seated themselves in their boxes and the colorful history of the "Little Emperor" began to unfold.

The court of Louis XVI, the horrors of the revolution and the guillotine, the Napoleonic battles, the rule of the directorate and the coronation were among the episodes portrayed. Desiree Clary, whom Napoleon had loved as the "Little Corporal," Josephine, whom he had made his empress; soldiers of the empire and dignitaries of the church passed in review before the brilliantly lighted audience.

The climax came when Napoleon and Josephine, represented by Philip A. Cusachs and Ethel Barrymore, crowned Emperor and Empress of France, received the King and Queen of Sicily and Holland and the marshals of France. Miss Barrymore was attired in a replica of the gown worn by Josephine on that occasion. A series of tableaux and ballets completed the episode.

Emmitsburg Five Wins 33-20 Game

Emmitsburg, Jan. 26.—In a lively contest, in which there was plenty of action, the Independent basketball team defeated the Williamsport, Maryland, quintet here last night in the high school auditorium by a score of 33 to 20. The Emmitsburg team made up of college and ex-high school players put up a snappy game throughout the four periods. The score at half time was 20 to 6 with the visitors on the short end. Joe Sadler, a former Gettysburg high school player, and Grushon did the best playing for the Emmitsburg combination while Kreps, who scored 17 points for his team, was the outstanding star for Williamsport.

"MY MAN," starring Fannie Brice, is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS
Fanny Grice is raising her brother, Phil, and her sister, Audrey, for whom she makes every sacrifice. But Audrey leaves home to "live her own life." In the costume shop where she sews, Fanny's voice is "discovered" by Lazarus, an actor who takes her to Waldorf, during the audition, Fanny loses of Audrey's interest in Waldorf. Heart-broken, she fails in singing. Fanny helps a man, Tom, who is broke, and, believing he loves her, precipitates an engagement. Audrey returns; Tom becomes infatuated, and on the eve of his wedding elopes with Audrey. Disconsolate, Fanny once more sings for Waldorf, and successfully. Rehearsing for the show...

"You're getting better every day," he'd tell her. And then he would comment on some one piece of work which she had done extraordinarily well, and tell her why it was good. Sometimes he would repeat snatches of conversation with Waldorf that were all to her credit, and she would be doubly pleased because she felt that she was making good for the art director who had done so much for her.

Then there were pictures to be taken, photographs in costume and photographs in everyday dress. Each hour seemed to bring forth something new.

And then Fanny got the greatest thrill of her life so far. That was the day, shortly before the opening of the show, when Lazarus brought in a newspaper, beckoned to Fanny, ceremoniously unfolded the paper and held it up before her eyes.

"Why, it's me!" She stared, uncomprehending, at the likeness of herself that stared back at her from the printed sheet.

"Of course," Lazarus grinned. "And the history of your life is within."

"Read it to me," Fanny stammered, unbelieving.

Lazarus began the account of the story of the new arrival in the theatre. There wasn't so very much to it, as the show hadn't yet opened, but to Fanny it was miraculous. To think of it! Her picture in the paper. Fanny Grice!

"But—but it says there Mr. Waldorf discovered me," she began, frowning. "It doesn't say anything about you."

"It's all in the game," Lazarus shrugged his shoulders.

"But how did they find all this—I mean, how did they find out all about me?" Fanny questioned.

"You remember the chap I introduced to you some time ago—the one you talked to?"

"Oh, the one you called the 'press agent.' I remember," Fanny nodded.

"Well, he wrote it."

"I know, but I told him about you seeing me at Thorne's."

"Sure, but it makes a better story to have Waldorf discover you. It means more to the papers, more to Waldorf, and more to you. And all's fair in love, war and the press agent game," Lazarus explained, laughing.

Fanny merely shook her head. She was learning more and more every day. She had seen so many new things, heard so many strange things, that as yet she had no perspective to speak on what was actually happening. The only thought that crossed her mind was how exactly like Lazarus that answer was.

From Audrey she still heard nothing, and now the opening of the show was close at hand. But Audrey had heard of Fanny. She read the theatrical news assiduously and one day came across Fanny's name. At first she didn't believe that this person could be her sister; didn't believe that Fanny could ever have been into a show such as Waldorf produced. Then one day she saw the photograph and she knew for certain this was none other than Fanny.

When Tom came home that evening from work Audrey was in an unusually bad humor. She showed him the story and demanded that they see the show on the opening night. Tom had grown accustomed to these insistent demands, and he knew that the only way to satisfy wife quiet was to try to satisfy them. It would take most of his week's salary, just to get a pair of seats for the gallery, but it was better than to have Audrey nagging him about their poverty. And so he managed, somehow.

Dress rehearsal came on apace. All night long it dragged on and on. Last minute changes had to be taken care of; whole numbers were thrown out—numbers that had been worked over for weeks. Nothing seemed to go right. Things had to be done over and over again. Dawn was breaking when Waldorf sent everybody home to get a few hours sleep with sharp instructions to be back at the theatre by twelve noon, and no later.

Fanny felt that she had never been so tired in her life. Every nerve seemed on edge. Sleep! The very thought appalled her. Sleep was far from her as though she had just waked from a twenty-four hours nap. She paced the floor in her hotel apartment that she had taken in order to be near the theatre, trying not to awaken Phil.

Tonight was her opening night! The night that might make or break her. She wanted to do her best, look her best, act her best. She must—she must, if only for the sake of Lazarus. She took off her clothes and tried to lie down for a while, but her mind was a whirl of thoughts. At last she dropped off into a doze, only to be aroused by the call she had left at the desk.

Fanny got up again and mechanically began to dress. She splashed her face with cold water and told herself she looked haggard. But she mustn't think about such things, now. Lazarus had told her she mustn't. Make-up, the excitement, would see her through, he had said.

Another grilling day. Work, work, right up to the last moment. A respite for dinner. Lazarus sent out and had some food brought in for her, but she could eat nothing. Her hands were beginning to grow cold and clammy; they shook as she changed her costume and wrapped a negligee about her. Would she live through it! Suppose she forgot her songs; suppose she forgot her lines; suppose she didn't go over. A thousand thoughts tormented her. The hours seemed as minutes, and yet the minutes dragged like hours. Her maid came back from dinner. It was time to begin to dress.

She began to apply the make-up creams with trembling fingers. Two huge boxes of flowers arrived, one from Lazarus and one from the girls at Thorne's. A wire came from Waldorf and one from Thorne. There was something thrilling about an opening night. The glamour of it all, the bright lights, the smell of grease paint began to stimulate her. She was a part of it all; she belonged to it. She was going to make good.

Now the theatre was beginning to fill up. People in evening clothes rustled through the aisles. Seats banged down with little plops. Programs rattled. The hat check boys dashed back and forth. Long lines of cabs crowded about the entrance. Big limousines drove up and deposited their passengers. An aura of perfume and fresh, cold air animated the atmosphere.

Behind the curtains stage hands were at work putting the finishing touches to the scenery set-ups. Electricians ran back and forth across the stage testing the lights. The wardrobe mistress answered a hurried call to repair a damaged costume. The call boy made his rounds. "Overture! Overture!" he announced.

A blare of music seeping through the asbestos curtain. Chorus girls lining up in the wings. Last minute warnings; last minute instructions. Waldorf chewing on a cigar. Principals issuing forth from dressing rooms. Telegrams and flowers arriving every moment. A signal. The house faded into darkness. The footlights came up. The curtain rose. Another Broadway revue was being born.

Fanny stood in the wings. Nearer was Phil. She squeezed his hand so hard he winced. Came her cue. Someone pushed her forward. She was on the stage. The footlights were blinding her. She couldn't see anything. She only knew the orchestra was playing her song. She went into it. In a moment it was over. She could hear them applauding. She got back into the kindly shelter of the wings. That's fine, keep it up; you're doing great. Someone was talking to her. She rushed to her dressing room to change.

as Chronicled in The Star

Files Reveal.

FIFTEEN YEARS AGO

Wills Building Sold.—P. Ward Stallsmith has purchased from Mrs. Ella K. Hammond, of Denver, Col., the historic Wills building. The price paid was $20,000. Mr. Stallsmith contemplates making extensive changes. His present store room will remain as it is, but the room now occupied by the postoffice will be remodeled and used as a store room. Other changes will also be made throughout.

On the second floor the room which President Lincoln occupied during his visit to Gettysburg, and in which it is said his speech was written, will be turned into a Lincoln museum.

Society's Annual Banquet.—The St. Francis Xavier Beneficial society held its annual banquet in Xavier Hall on Thursday evening, January 18th, with about seventy members and friends present.

William McSherry, Esq., acted as toastmaster after the banquet when several speeches were made. Among those who responded were The Rev. W. F. Boyle, E. P. Wisotzky, the president; George Kobil, Frank McDermitt and C. E. Swisher.

Here and There.—Harry Gottlieb, who has resided in Gettysburg for the past four years, during which time he has been engaged in the shoe repairing business, will move to Baltimore. He has sold his business to Amos Butt who will continue at his old stand. Mr. Gottlieb will conduct an electric shoe repairing shop in Baltimore.

If no other unexpected delays occur in the completion of the Federal building it will be ready for occupancy about Feb. 15th. The marble that was to be used for the inside work was delayed and work was suspended to a certain extent for several weeks.

In the presence of seventy-five of their friends, some of whom were present at their wedding ceremony twenty-five years ago, Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Weaver celebrated their silver wedding anniversary at their home near town on Saturday.

Mrs. D. J. Reile has leased the F. G. McKinney store room, 36 Carlisle street, Hanover, and will open a millinery store in the spring. Eddie Plank's team of bowlers defeated Chambersburg on Wednesday night by a margin of thirty-nine pins. The score: Gettysburg, 2519; Chambersburg, 2480. Cyrus S. Griest has resigned as a member of the board of directors of the Citizens Trust company and C. Arthur Griest has been elected to fill the vacancy.

Former Student Weds.—Rev. Charles J. Aund, pastor of the Grace Lutheran church, York, and Miss Maude Fahs, of Tyrone, were married in the latter place Tuesday. Seven ministers, all relatives of the contracting parties, officiated, and including the groom, there were eight ministers in the ceremony.

Rev. Aund was graduated from both the college and seminary here and Miss Fahs also attended college here.

Diller—Neely.—Orpheus Diller and Miss Pluvia Neely, both well known residents of York Springs, were united in marriage on Tuesday, January 20th, at Hunterstown, by Rev. George F. Baker, of the Presbyterian church.

Mr. Diller is a merchant of York Springs, while Mrs. Diller has been engaged in the millinery business for some years.

After a bridal tour, Mr. and Mrs. Diller will reside in York Springs.

Parent Teachers' Meet.—With a good attendance the regular monthly meeting of the Parent Teachers' Association was held in the high school building on Friday evening.

The meeting was called to order by the president, Mrs. William Arch McLean.

Dr. Singmaster, the principal speaker of the evening, gave an excellent address on how teachers should instruct their children in relation to the abolition of war. That every child should have the desire to see the day when liquor traffic and war is abolished was the expression of Dr. Singmaster, and he also recommended that books on peace be introduced into the schools.

The visiting committee for this month is composed of the following members: Mrs. Robert C. Miller, Mrs. Horace A. Crouse, Mrs. Reuben Fisel, Mrs. Samuel Spangler, Mrs. J. Price Oyler, Mrs. H. B. Sefton and Mrs. Milton R. Remmel.

The musical entertainment of the evening consisted of selections by a double male quartet.

Personal.—E. P. Miller and Truman Beard spent several days in New York this week attending the furniture exposition.

Miss Rose Stock is spending several days with friends in Baltimore.

Miss Sue Phillips, of Waynesboro, was a guest at the home of Miss Catharine Duncan, on Lincoln avenue.

Dr. E. D. Hudson has returned from Philadelphia where he took a special course in the University of Pennsylvania.

WEALTH
I'm a rich man and I boast it!
Rich in friendship tried and true,
And a king's lot would be happier
if such friends as mine he knew.
I'm a rich man and I know it;
rich in laughter and in mirth,
And I wouldn't trade that treasure for the greatest bank on earth.
I'm a rich man and I shout it! Who in all this world can see
More of sky and hill and valley than the Lord permits to me?
When the summer birds are pouring out their music to the sky,
Can the man whose purse is fatter hear more melody than I?
Can a hundred million dollars
buy more perfume from a rose,
Or get more of rain and sunshine than my little garden knows?
Let who will count wealth in figures,
pages wide and columns long,
I'll count mine in lasting friendships and in hours of mirth and song.

Wake up! wake up! 'Tis morning time,
The brook is singing a woodland rhyme,
The little bird from his house in the tree
Is pouring a throatful of melody.
'Tis a beautiful day in Fairy Land,
With sunshine and flowers on every hand.

"How happy am I," thought the poor woodcutter, whistling merrily as he pulled on his boots. "These kind little bunnies have brought back my son," and he whistled some more and his wife sang happily as she made the breakfast. The woodcutter's little boy was playing under the trees now and then running up to Donkey Silver Heels to ask him questions about the two little rabbits.

"All is well in the forest dell. The woodcutter's boy plays with his toy."

sang the pretty Yellow Bird. Yes, indeed, the Magic Purple Weed had restored dear Uncle Lucky to his natural shape and had freed the woodcutter's son from the spell of the Wicked Water Witch. Yes, every one was happy, and no doubt the Fairy Queen far away in her forest palace was happy, also, to think that dear Uncle Lucky was now no longer a frog and that the woodcutter's son no longer wore ears like those of a rabbit and was again at home with his loving parents.

By and by the two little rabbits said goodby and rode away on Donkey Silver Heels. "Goodness me!" all of a sudden exclaimed dear Uncle Lucky. "Where did we leave our Sledmobile? My old brain is all muddled up since I came into Fairy Bunny Land. Maybe being turned into a frog for several days has also made me stupid."

"I remember," cried the bright little bunny. "We left it just on the border; just where we crossed from

TODAY'S TALK

By GEORGE MATTHEWS ADAMS

HE DIED—LIVING!

THERE is something very inspiring about people who do not seem to be in any extra hurry—who have time to live.

Today I went to call on an old friend, at his office, and after sparring with two young ladies for a period of, let us say ten minutes, I succeeded in obtaining the information that my friend was very busy but could my message be taken to him. "Yes, indeed," was my reply, "just tell him I didn't have anything important on my mind—just dropped in to say 'Hello' and chat friendly for a few minutes, but since he is too busy, just say that I called!"

George Gissing in a very lovely letter to his friend, Edward Clodd, gave a very beautiful instance which I quote in full as he wrote it in his letter:

"There was a praetorian prefect under Hadrian, a fine old fellow called Similis. Permitted at length to lay down his office, he retired to his country estate, where he died seven years later. On his tomb he had graven:

'Here lies Similis, who existed for 64 years, and lived 7.'

I so often think—why all this rush to get fame or fortune, when the real worthwhile thing of life is to live? And to live we must love, and take time to serve others, and learn that happiness given to someone else is happiness earned for ourselves.

I recently met an old friend—a great lover of books. He came to my library in town and we forgot the dinner hour. Finally we mustered sufficient courage to go out and get some food at about ten o'clock, and then we went back to our book haunt again, and my friend forgot his last train time, and I forgot the keys to my home in the country! So I had to drive back to town for the night, and my friend had to creep stealthily to his bed-chamber in the "wee small" hours. But what a glorious time we had! We fondled books hundreds of years old and touched the treasure and that, under whispers, almost.

Every oncoming year seems to teach me that there is everything in this love of beauty and all that inspires a love of the beautiful. When everything else evaporates, and we become more mystified than ever over the problem of life, the explanation of the rose and the pansy, the budgings of spring and the colors of autumn loom plainer than ever.

God doesn't seem so clear at times, but if He made the rose and the pansy, we can understand Him all right. Besides, to date, no one else has taken the credit for making these silent and gorgeously gowned children of the soil.

IS IT THE NERVOUS SYSTEM?

That spinal column, running down the center of your back is the great nerve tree of the body, with branches leading to every limb and part of the system, each carrying delicate nerves which have their separate functions. When some, or all of these, get out of order, you need Chiropractic adjustment to restore you to normal.
